

I find it extremely funny that should the federal supreme court pass a ruling states may undertake ways to narrow down the court's decision. Something which happens often in the State of NJ...for example: Search and Seizure protections as well as Police liability in criminal pursuits. What amazes me is that these rulings go out of the way to protect criminal rights at the expense of the many law abiding residents.

However, take a law aimed at reducing the everyday stresses for the average law abiding person; Do Not Call lists, and when the State of NJ toughens that law claim that they cannot do that because they are narrowing down the decision of the Federal Government. Do I see a Double Standard here, or does the FCC just not care because it's become pro-business over the last 4 years?

And by the way, I am a Republican and I am saying this; Leave NJ's law alone, it's been nice not having one solicitation over the last year. Political solicitations notwithstanding, I received many of those at home and on my cell phone during the election season.
